International Energy Situation, Outlook to 1985. In the absence of greatly increased energy conservation, projected world demand for oil will approach productive capacity by the early 1980's and substantially exceed capacity by 1985. In these circumstances, prices will rise sharply to ration available supplies no matter what Saudi Arabia does. These are two of the shocking conclusions of this Central Intelligence Agency booklet, which examines the pattern of world oil demand and supply between now and 1985. Its disturbing findings, presented briefly and in plain language, are important reading. 1977. 18 p. il.

Residential Energy Consumption. The following booklets examine the current trends in construction and design and the energy consumption patterns of homes in selected United States cities. Each booklet identifies and quantifies the total heating and cooling energy requirements for typical single-family detached, single-family attached, low-rise multifamily, and high-rise multifamily buildings; and evaluates the use of various technical innovations potentially capable of minimizing energy consumption in typical dwellings. The reports include chapters on the characteristics of typical local homes, on the computation of heating and cooling energy requirements in typical homes, and on the energy consumption of thermally improved homes.
